

Aug 28, 2013, 8:38am PDT

Fiber optics tech startup Kaiam raises $20 million

Fiber optic communications network equipment maker Kaiam Corp., led by Bardia Pezeshki, has raised $20 million in new funding.

Kaiam Corp., a Newark company that makes hardware used in fiber optics communications networks, disclosed on Wednesday that it has raised $20 million in new funding.

The company led by CEO Bardia Pezeshki didn't disclose in the Securities and Exchange Commission filing who the investors in the round were but did say there were eight involved.

The company previously raised about $12 million and its existing investors include U.S. Venture Partners and TriplePoint Capital.

Board members listed on the SEC filing include Mark van den Berg of Technology Partners, Storm Ventures Executive-in-Residence Phil Anthony and Chris Rust of U.S. Venture Partners.

Kaiam makes circuits, optical subassemblies, modules and transceivers for the fiber optics communications industry.

Click here to read the SEC filing by Kaiam Corp. about its funding.

Cromwell Schubarth is the Senior Technology Reporter at the Business Journal.